

Biographical Sketch: Dieter Hartmann

Dr. Dieter Hartmann is a Professor of Astronomy at Clemson University, Clemson SC. He is an internationally recognized scientist with numerous publications in peer-reviewed journals. His area of expertise is in gamma-ray astronomy and he has observing experience on both space-based and ground-based observatories. He is currently the Chair of the User Group for NASA's Swift mission, and member of the User Group for NASA's Fermi mission. He has organized several international meetings and is currently the Astrophysical Journal Scientific Editor.