

Dr. Quinn Spadola

AAAS Fellow

National Nanotechnology Coordination

Office Class of 2014-2015

Quinn Spadola is a biophysicist who discovered her love of science education and outreach while completing her PhD. After receiving her doctorate, Dr. Spadola entered the Science and Natural History Filmmaking program at Montana State University. There, she combined her technical background with a new-found ability to present information to non-scientists in an engaging, visual format. In her films, she explores the politics of science. Her most recent project, Maybe a Scientist, addresses the stereotyped cultural images of scientists and how they affect the aspirations of young people.
