General Notes

This publication is based on data from two annual federal surveys. Bachelor's and master's degree data and data on doctoral degrees in engineering technologies were collected from all accredited institutions of higher education by the Integrated Postsecondary Education Data System Completions Survey, conducted by the National Center for Education Statistics (NCES), U.S. Department of Education. Data on research doctoral degrees in all fields except engineering technologies were collected by the Survey of Earned Doctorates (SED), a universe survey of individual doctorate recipients sponsored by the National Science Foundation (NSF) and five other federal agencies.

These data cover earned degrees conferred from 1966 to 2010 in the aggregate United States, which comprises the 50 states, the District of Columbia, and the U.S. territories and outlying areas (American Samoa, the former Canal Zone, Guam, the Northern Mariana Islands, Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands). Degree data are compiled for a 12-month period, July of one year through June of the following year. For convenience, degrees in a given July-through-June period are referred to by the year in which the period ended (e.g., 2010 means the 12-month period beginning 1 July 2009 and ending 30 June 2010).

This publication focuses on degrees in science and engineering (S&E) fields, and, where appropriate, the data are reclassified according to NSF field categories. In the data tables, engineering technology degrees and degrees in the health/medical sciences are not included in totals for S&E fields but are provided as separate data tables, as are data on first professional degrees.

The time series for degree data may be affected by changes in definitions, instructions, and field classifications, including the introduction of new specialties. In this report, data for earlier years are presented as consistently as possible with current field classifications. See appendix B, "Classification of Fields of Study," for further information on the field classifications used. See also the section "Field Classification Schemes" in appendix A, "Technical Notes," for a discussion of the impacts of field classification changes on counts of bachelor's, master's, and doctoral degrees in six engineering fields and two social sciences fields. Bachelor's and master's degree data for years 2000–06 differ from data presented in earlier editions of this report owing to the field classification changes and also because the degrees from a larger set of institutions are now being included in this report for 2000 and later years. See appendix A for a discussion of this change in coverage. Also note that detailed national data were not released by NCES for the academic year ending 1999.

NOTES: After 1988 a number of doctoral degree holders did not report sex. Percentages of women are calculated based on the total of men plus women, not on total number of degrees as reported in table 1. Data on first professional degrees are provided in tables 57-59.

NA = not available; detailed national data were not released by the National Center for Education Statistics for the academic year ending in 1999.

NOTES: After 1988 a number of doctoral degree holders did not report sex. Percentages of women are calculated based on the total of men plus women, not on total number of degrees as reported in table 1. Data on first professional degrees are provided in tables 57-59.

SOURCES: Tabulated by National Science Foundation/National Center for Science and Engineering Statistics (NSF/NCSES); data from Department of Education/National Center for Education Statistics: Integrated Postsecondary Education Data System Completions Survey and NSF/NCSES: Survey of Earned Doctorates.

^a In the Survey of Earned Doctorates (SED), data on computer sciences were not collected separately from mathematics until 1978, and complete data on computer sciences are not available from the SED until 1979. Data shown for 1966–78 are from the Integrated Postsecondary Education Data System Completions Survey.

NOTES: Detail may not sum to total because of missing information on sex for some recipients. See appendix B for specific fields that are included in this field of study.

^a In the Survey of Earned Doctorates (SED), data on computer sciences were not collected separately from mathematics until 1978, and complete data on computer sciences are not available from the SED until 1979. Data shown for 1966–78 are from the Integrated Postsecondary Education Data System Completions Survey.

NOTES: Detail may not sum to total because of missing information on sex for some recipients. See appendix B for specific fields that are included in this field of study.

NOTES: Detail may not sum to total because of missing information on sex for some recipients. Counts of doctorates in this field of study include sociology degrees only. Counts of bachelor's and master's degrees in this field include degrees in demography/population studies through 1997. For 1998 and later years, counts of bachelor's and master's degrees are of sociology degrees only, and degrees awarded in demography/population studies are counted in Other social sciences. See appendix A for more information on the fields of study reported in the affected tables.

NA = not available; detailed national data were not released by the National Center for Education Statistics for the academic year ending in 1999.

NOTES: Detail may not sum to total because of missing information on sex for some recipients. For 1998 and later years, counts of bachelor's and master's degrees in this field include degrees in demography/population studies. For 1997 and earlier years, counts of bachelor's and master's degrees awarded in demography/population studies are included in sociology degrees. See appendix A for more information on the fields of study reported in the affected tables.

NA = not available; detailed national data were not released by the National Center for Education Statistics for the academic year ending in 1999.

NOTES: Detail may not sum to total because of missing information on sex for some recipients. Counts of doctorates in this field of study include chemical engineering degrees only. Counts of bachelor's and master's degrees in this field include degrees in polymer and plastics engineering and petroleum engineering through 1997. For 1998 and later years, counts of bachelor's and master's degrees are of chemical engineering degrees only, and degrees awarded in polymer and plastics engineering and petroleum engineering are counted in Other engineering. See appendix A for more information on the fields of study reported among the affected tables.

NA = not available: detailed national data were not released by the National Center for Education Statistics for the academic year ending in 1999.

NOTES: Detail may not sum to total because of missing information on sex for some recipients. See appendix B for specific fields that are included in this field of study. Values for years prior to 2008 will differ from previously published reports due to a change in the specific fields that are included in this field of study.

NA = not available; detailed national data were not released by the National Center for Education Statistics for the academic year ending in 1999. Materials science engineering first appeared as a field of study in the Survey of Earned Doctorates in 1969.

NOTES: Detail may not sum to total because of missing information on sex for some recipients. Counts of doctorates in this field of study include materials science engineering degrees only. Counts of bachelor's and master's degrees in this field include degrees in ceramic sciences engineering and metallurgical engineering through 1997. For 1998 and later years counts of bachelor's and master's degrees are of materials science engineering degrees only, and degrees awarded in ceramic sciences engineering and metallurgical engineering are counted in Other engineering. See appendix A for more information on the fields of study reported among the affected tables.

NA = not available; detailed national data were not released by the National Center for Education Statistics for the academic year ending in 1999.

NOTES: Detail may not sum to total because of missing information on sex for some recipients. For 1998 and later years, counts of bachelor's and master's degrees in this field include degrees in polymer and plastics engineering, petroleum engineering, environmental health engineering, computer engineering, communications engineering, ceramic sciences engineering, metallurgical engineering, and engineering mechanics. For 1997 and earlier years, counts of bachelor's and master's degrees awarded in polymer and plastics engineering and petroleum engineering are included in chemical engineering degrees, degrees awarded in environmental health engineering are included in civil engineering degrees, degrees awarded in computer engineering and communications engineering are included in electrical engineering degrees, degrees awarded in ceramic sciences engineering and metallurgical engineering are included in materials science engineering, and degrees in engineering mechanics are included in mechanical engineering degrees. See appendix A for more information on the fields of study reported in the affected tables.

NOTES: Detail may not sum to total because of missing information on sex for some recipients. Engineering technology is defined as instructional programs that prepare individuals to support and assist engineering and related professionals or to provide such services independently. Programs stress specialized, practical knowledge related to the mathematical, scientific, or technical aspects of engineering and related sciences.

Appendix A. Technical Notes

Bachelor's and Master's Degree Data

This publication uses data from the Integrated Postsecondary Education Data System (IPEDS) Completions Survey to report numbers of bachelor's and master's degrees. The Completions Survey, conducted by the National Center for Education Statistics (NCES), U.S. Department of Education, collects data annually on all degrees conferred between 1 July of one year and 30 June of the following year from the universe of accredited institutions of higher education in the 50 states, the District of Columbia, and the U.S. territories and outlying areas. Institutional representatives submit data to the IPEDS online collection system. The survey is mandatory for all institutions that participate in or are applicants for participation in any federal financial assistance program authorized by Title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965, as amended. Data are collected according to sex of recipient and field of study. For more information on IPEDS, see <http://nces.ed.gov/IPEDS/about/>.

Each year between 1966 and 2010, institutional response rates to the survey have exceeded 99%. Imputations for nonresponse were based on the previous year's response for an institution. For bachelor's and master's degree data, the percentage of degrees imputed rounds to zero.

Because the data in this report include those for institutions in the U.S. territories, they may differ from numbers published by NCES that relate to the 50 states and the District of Columbia and their field groupings. Data on degrees by field of study were collected according to the NCES Classification of Instructional Programs (CIP) (see appendix B). Information on the CIP is available at <http://nces.ed.gov/pubs2002/cip2000/>.

Through 1995, IPEDS reports were concerned primarily with the subset of postsecondary institutions that were accredited at the college level by an agency recognized by the Secretary, U.S. Department of Education. The National Science Foundation (NSF) presented counts of bachelor's and master's degrees from this same subset of institutions in its science and engineering (S&E) degrees reports (S&E Degrees). Beginning with 1996 data, NCES categorized the postsecondary institutional universe on the basis of degree-granting status as well as eligibility for Title IV federal financial aid (based on a list of eligible institutions maintained by the Department of Education's Office of Postsecondary Education). This change expanded the types of institutions whose data appear in NCES reports to include for-profit and online institutions. NSF chose to retain the earlier, less inclusive institutional coverage criterion for the data in its S&E Degrees report. As a result, beginning with the 1966–96 edition, the counts of bachelor's and master's degrees presented in S&E Degrees reports diverged from the degree counts reported by IPEDS. With the 1966–2008 edition, the S&E Degrees report adopted the more inclusive institutional coverage of the IPEDS reports, and the bachelor's and master's degree counts from 2000 forward are now based on the larger set of institutions (owing to field classification issues, the change in institutional coverage was not extended all the way back to the original divergence in 1996). Consequently, the bachelor's and master's degree counts for 2000–06 appearing in the present edition of the S&E Degrees report differ from the degree counts reported in earlier editions for those years. Also, detailed national data were not released by NCES for the academic year ending 1999, and so bachelor's and master's degree data for those years are missing from all tables.

Doctoral Degree Data

Data on doctoral degrees were derived from the Survey of Earned Doctorates (SED), funded jointly by NSF, the National Institutes of Health, the U.S. Department of Education, the U.S. Department of Agriculture, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, and the National Endowment for the Humanities.

The SED is a voluntary survey that collects information annually for the period of 1 July of one year through 30 June of the following year from all persons who have fulfilled the requirements for a research doctorate at an accredited U.S. institution. A research doctorate is a doctoral degree that (1) requires the completion of an original intellectual contribution in the form of a dissertation or an equivalent project of work (e.g., musical composition), and (2) is not primarily intended for the practice of a profession. Doctoral degrees, such as the PhD, DSc, and research EdD, are included in this survey; professional doctoral degrees, such as the MD, JD, DDS, PsyD, and DMin, are not. The Completions Survey collects data on professional doctoral degrees (called "doctorate degree-professional practice") as well as research doctoral degrees. The Completions Survey reported that over 104,000 professional doctoral degrees were awarded in 2011, of which only 1,325 were awarded in S&E fields.

SED data were preferred over Completions Survey data for doctoral degrees because the self-reported data provided by individual doctorate recipients are more specific with respect to the field of specialization. Furthermore, self-reported data provide almost complete coverage for data by field and sex of individual recipients, whereas the institutional data from NCES are subject to imputation for nonresponse.

The SED survey forms are sent to all accredited U.S. doctorate-granting institutions for distribution by the graduate deans to all research doctorate recipients as they complete degree requirements. The survey collects demographic data, such as the student's sex, citizenship, and racial/ethnic group; educational history, including field of degree; sources of graduate student support; employment status during the year preceding receipt of the doctorate; postgraduation plans; and background on parents' education.

Approximately 93% of doctorate recipients complete and return the survey forms. For nonrespondents, commencement programs, graduation lists, and other similar public records allow construction of partial records, limited to field of study, year of doctorate, doctoral institution, and sex, which are added to the data file. Consequently, for the variables used in this report, there is almost complete coverage. Data are updated annually from completed survey forms submitted belatedly by previous nonrespondents; therefore data on doctorates are subject to revision and may differ slightly from reports published earlier. For more information on the SED, see <http://www.nsf.gov/statistics/doctorates/>.

Field Classification Schemes

Four field classification systems were used during the 1966–2010 period covered by this report. The current classification scheme for the CIP is used for the Completions Survey; it and corresponding fields for the SED are provided in appendix B, "Classification of Fields of Study." Data for earlier years are presented as consistently as possible with the current classification schemes.

Note that the data in this report are grouped into the S&E categories used by NSF. Data on engineering technology degrees and degrees in health/medical fields are not included in the S&E totals here. Therefore, data in this report may differ from those in reports published by the U.S. Department of Education. However, separate tables for engineering technology and for health/medical fields, as well as for first professional degrees, are included in this report.

Beginning with the 1966–2008 edition of the S&E Degrees report, the constituent fields of study reported in two social sciences fields and six engineering fields were changed. Consequently, the counts of degrees in the eight affected data tables differ from the counts reported in pre-2008 editions of this report, as explained in the following paragraphs.

- In pre-2008 editions of this report, counts of bachelor's, master's, and doctoral degrees in sociology included degrees in the fields of demography/population studies and sociology. Beginning with the 1966–2008 edition, doctoral degrees in demography/population studies are included within the other social sciences category of fields (table 45), and the counts of sociology doctoral degrees (table 44) reflect only degrees awarded in the single field of sociology. These adjustments were applied to all years reported in the two tables. The counts of bachelor's and master's degrees in the field of demography/population studies are also included within other social sciences, but only for 2000 and later years. That is, counts of bachelor's and master's degrees reported in table 44 (sociology) include demography/population studies degrees and sociology degrees for 1998 and earlier years but exclude the demography/population studies degrees from 2000 onward; counts of bachelor's and master's degrees reported in table 45 (other social sciences) include demography/population studies degrees for 2000 and later years but exclude those degrees for years 1998 and earlier. These changes are summarized in table A-1.
- In pre-2008 editions of this report, counts of bachelor's, master's, and doctoral degrees in each of the following five engineering field categories included degrees in multiple subfields of engineering: chemical engineering (table 48), civil engineering (table 49), electrical engineering (table 50), materials science engineering (table 52), and mechanical engineering (table 53). Beginning with the 1966–2008 edition, counts of doctoral degrees in these five engineering tables reflect only single engineering subfields, and the remaining doctoral degrees from the subfields formerly included in these five engineering field categories are counted within the other engineering category (table 54). These adjustments were applied to all years reported in the six tables. The same adjustments are made to the counts of bachelor's and master's degrees, but only for 2000 and later years. For 1998 and earlier years, the counts of bachelor's and master's degrees in the five noted engineering tables include degrees in multiple engineering subfields, and the counts of degrees in the other engineering table exclude degrees awarded in these subfields. These changes are summarized in table A-2.

To summarize the changes in the eight affected data tables: (1) counts of doctoral degrees reported in 1966–2008 and later editions of the S&E Degrees report differ from the counts reported in pre-2008 editions, and the differences occur in all years reported in the eight data tables; (2) counts of bachelor's and master's degrees reported in 1966–2008 and later editions of the S&E Degrees report differ from the counts reported in pre-2008 editions, but the differences occur only in the data for 2000 and later years.

^a Field dropped in 2004.

^b Field introduced in 2007.

^c Field introduced in 2001.

^d Field dropped in 2007.

^e Field introduced in 2004.

^f Field code was listed as 887 on the 2004–06 questionnaires.

NOTES: The U.S. Department of Education's Integrated Postsecondary Education Data System (IPEDS) Completions Survey uses the Classification of Instructional Programs codes to help responding institutions classify degrees according to the instructional programs awarding the degrees. The National Science Foundation's Survey of Earned Doctorates uses its own field of degree taxonomy to help respondents (doctorate recipients) self-report their field of degrees.
